FEBRUARY PROGRAM (Feb. 24, 2010)

The Duration of Things by Gesa Cowell

This series of still life photographs deals with how objects can become vessels for memories and emotions attached to the memories. Objects make people realize in a very visceral way that the past was real. Sometimes traumatic events can help transform an object into something very powerful. There is also the idea that objects have an energy of their own, i.e., they've been handled by different people in different situations over time; they acquire their own story. I used this series as my thesis project and in my presentation I am talking about what led me to the series, background, talk about influences (photographers and painters), some philosophical ideas about photography that influenced my style, thoughts behind editing the photographs/series, processes, ...etc. If you would like to see more of the series, you can find it at <http://www.gesacowell.com> under the link "Duration of Things".

Biography

Photographs, especially portraits, have always fascinated me. As early as I can remember, I have been drawn to family photographs, studying faces, poses and settings and trying to conjure up a connection to the people in the image.

The ability of the camera to serve as another form of memory by preserving moments in time is what initially attracted me initially to photography.

the Lens Paper

I believe cameras can define reality for a specific moment and the photograph, through its mimetic nature, can provide a type of deceptive continuity. But just as memories can be unreliable, so too can be photographs as they are traces of actual objects that are taken out of context of environment and time. My objective is to create images that are consciously detached from the specific moment, and therefore achieve a deeper understanding or meaning.

I want to create images with a sense of duration which transcends the idea of historic time and narrative. While I am interested in capturing appearances and preserving memories, I ultimately want to evoke a sense of timelessness and poignancy. In my photography, I focus on still life and portraiture. My images resonate with the viewer, evoking associations and memories and encourage thoughts about the role objects play in creating life's recollections.

While I have always been interested in expressing myself through the arts, be it through painting, writing or photography, it has taken me several years to develop the courage and confidence to share my artistic vision with others. Partly because of this, I am very interested and involved in teaching and mentoring; especially through children's arts programs.

Although I initially studied Italian and English literature in college I graduated with a BS in Business. After several years in the corporate world, I decided to finally return to my creative roots and rediscovered my interest in photography. In 2004, I opened a small photography studio in San Diego focusing on family portraits and commissioned work. In 2009, I received a Master of Fine Art degree in Photography at the Academy of Art University in San Francisco.

MEMBER SHARE by Barbara Swanson

February's member share topic is "Long Exposures". Please bring up to two images to share.

Long exposures can be very effective in certain situations. One would be when there is very little light, such as after dusk or under a forest canopy. Motion will be recorded as a blur, while stationary objects can be sharp (if in focus). Classic examples of this are moving water, such as waves, rivers or waterfalls. These types of photos usually have a sharp portion (such as rocks) and a motion-blurred subject. The length of exposure can make the water look very different, ranging from almost in focus and grainy to silky smooth. It is usually a good idea to bracket

these exposures with different amounts of time to determine what looks best. Another classic example is star trails at night. In general a tripod is very helpful and often necessary for these images.

Long exposures can also be used on other moving objects, such as people and animals. In general, a technique called panning is used. The photographer focuses on the moving subject and then opens the shutter while tracking the subject. It helps to be panning the camera before pressing the shutter. Once again, different shutter speeds should be tried. Often a part of the subject comes out fairly sharply if the panning rate matches the movement of the subject. Depending on the shutter speed, usually significantly less than a second, this technique can be used with a hand-held camera.

EDITOR NEEDED by Ron Nash

I am stepping down as the Editor of the Lens Paper. It takes 3 or 4 hours a month to edit the articles from the VLT, members and sponsors into the Lens Paper. WEBSITE NEWS by Grant Hulbert

Grant will be giving a short presentation about the new website member login features at our February meeting.

Our club has a vibrant and talented membership; let's all help reveal our great photos to the world via our web site!

In order to make sharing images easier for both our members and volunteers who take in the images, we have built an online member login that gives you complete control over your galleries, and helps automate member share submissions. You can also keep your mailing address and contact information up-to-date, and let us know if you prefer to save a postage stamp by receiving your newsletter via email.

Having trouble preparing your image for member share projection, or attaching files to email? Let the web site do the drudgework for you! It will automatically scale your images and send them to the projectionist.

To log in, click the red "Members Login" link at the top of www.nc-photo.org; your username is your email address, and your password will be the last seven digits of your phone number, including the dash. For example, Username: john@doe.com Password: 555-1212. Please change your password as soon as you log in, so your account will be more secure. If you have trouble logging in, send an email to membership@nc-photo.org for help.

Once you're in, please take a moment to update your contact information so the club has your correct mailing address and email. To start adding photos to your personal gallery, click the "Galleries" tab near the top of the screen. There you'll see a place to enter a short biography, as well as a few simple buttons for creating galleries and uploading images. The software automatically scales images for web presentation, and no longer requires you to type complex copyright codes (no more © fussiness!). To upload member share photos, simply click the "Member Share" tab and follow the instructions. You can upload images to past and present Photo Shoots, too.

We encourage everyone to create galleries and add their favorite images, so the website stays fresh and current. Happy clicking!

Welcome to our Newest Members!

Felix Bonomo's LA Times Award
 by Mike McMahon

NCPS member Felix Bonomo received winning recognition in the LA Times 2009 Travel Photos of the Year contest. His image, Sentimental Journey (Datong, China) was one of the top 100 images selected from over 5,000 entries. In fact, it was one of the top 18 selected to run in the Travel Section of the LA Times on December 27th. Even better, it was one of the three selected for Page 1! We congratulate Felix on his well-deserved award.
